THE MIRACLE.

She's but a little colleen gay,
Scarce thicker than me thumb,
But oh, the word she spoke the day!
'Its blind I am, and dumb.
Her small mouth had a pleadin' twist
As though' twas wishful to be kissed;
I thought it gave the true word whist,
And hope lept in the heart of me.

The Pledge of the Poor

The little old father seemed very dear to Margaret, who was watching bim as he wrote his records rapidly in his small, cramped hand. It was in his small, cramped hand. It was all or nearly all, that he wrote. Long ago he had given up hope of the book which was to have been his life work, and buried it deep beneath a country physician's responsibilities. Margaret had always resented this. What right had these people to his life, who scarcely accorded him a living?

"Father," she said, suddenly, "what are you writing?"

He held the page with his forefinger, as he net her cold gray eyes with a pair startlingly like them. Then he smiled, and two wrinkles disappeared from his forehead, and two appeared from his forehead, and two appeared from his forehead, and two appeared about his mouth.

"Just visits, dear, to pay—and to be paid for," he answered.

"There are many more of the first than of the last, aren't there?"

"Why, surely,"

He smiled as he said it, but Mar

"Why, surely."

He smiled as he said it, but Margaret did not smile. So it had always been, so it would always been four to pay and one to be paid for.—And they needed many things. No one knew that better than Margaret. Much responsibility devolved on her. The little half-invalid mother must not know, the children could not, the father did not. But Margaret had a complete understanding of the lease of life accorded boyish boots, of the wants, wishes and needs of growing girls.

She thought with hot impatience of her father's coat—how green it had looked in yesterday's blaze of sunlight! How green it would look in the sunlight of how many to-morrows! It was not right; it was not fair. She had a fierce impulse to hide him away from others and himself; to lighten his path with the success her love and ambition craved. He spent himself freely on those who gave not again. He threw his love, his learning, his very life into a battle which was not to the strong.

Margaret laid down the scarcely touched sewing. The offer of assist-denied. The %id door had echoed to many scores of just such knocks. "O dear!" she said. Her father started as soon as she. Knocks like that, the call to arms of the physician, sounded through his deepest slumbers. He was transformed in the twinkling of an eye. The wearled old man was the alert physician, confident, eagerthe alert physician, confident, eager eyed, the light of battle on his face Margaret's heart thrilled as she looked and Margaret sat long with the little leather-covered book in her hand, idly leather-covered book in her hand, idly turning the pages. The places marked with a cross were not many. She had counted and recounted the ones which were reasonably sure to pay. The sum total was pitifully inadequate. Even if every one he had marked paid in full and at once, there was an alguning deficit. There was was an alarming deficit. There was othing she could do.

nothing she could do.

But suddenly, as that thought came to her puzzled brain, another followed.
There was something she could dosomething that would set things straight for the present and leave a little margin for the encroaching fure. In a moment the impotent leather-covered book had assumed the varpertions of the pure of feet unity.

leather-covered book had assumed the proportions of the purse of Fortunatus. There were dozens and dozens of visits with no check after them. Her father had not intended to send them out, but if she did, and the reluctant bills were safely paid, who could be anything but glad about it?

Once decided, she wrote rapidly in her large, firm hand, so different from her father's. The table was soon littered with bills. On those of longest standing she wrote, "Please remit." When the rural postman arrived, she had a load for him. And then she waited.

The waiting was not long. That

The waiting was not long. That evening there came a timid, hesitating knock on the door where a peremptory summons so often sounded. Margaret summons so otten sounded. Margaret threw It wide. For a moment she did not know the woman who stood before her, a shawl thrown over her head. But she knew the voice. "It's Mrs. Halloran, Miss Margaret,"

The relief was plain on the woman's face. She protested, but feebly, while her old hand hovered over the coin. It is not lightly that one relinquishes the means of lightly that one relinquishes

"It is, but I'm leaving two days ahead of time. There's a case Parker wants to talk over with me."

Margaret fushed with pride at the honor so simply stated. After all, tiere were some who appreciated him. "But what about the bills you were going to make out, father? You see, the girls' winter things have to come. It would be difficult to explain to her father, to feel his disappointment in her. Yet inconsistantly, she longed for his return.

"But what about troubled Martha, but I can't delay to-night."

"Could I make them out? Even a day makes a difference."

"Why, to be sure you could. It would be a help to me."

"It is, but I'm leaving two days ahead of time. There's a case Parker wants to talk over with me."

Margaret was glad of that. To each she gave the same excuse—the bills had been sent by mistake. She did not feel the words an untruth. She sighed as she drove homeward. So far things hat turned out well, but the hardest part was to come. It would be difficult to explain to her father, to feel his disappointment in her. Yet inconsistantly, she longed for his return.

She drove to the station to meet thim, while they talked of trivial things. Just a question, "Any of my patients been up, Margaret?"

And then it was out. Blundering iv, stumblingly, sparing not heiself, but bull-dogmatir

An investigation just made by the New York milk committee with a view to getting definite information as to the effects of infant mortality on so cial and economic conditions has resulted in some interesting disclosures. Three sections of the city were selected for study, varying much in size, owing to different densities of population, but each containing about 7,500 persons. In the first, inhabited large persons. In the first, inhabited large persons. In the first, inhabited large on, where the circumstances of the more were born in a year; in the second, where the circumstances of the people were what is called comfortable, the births numbered 160, while in the third, where poverty prevailed, 434 babies were born.

But during two summer weeks, one of them the hottest of the year, not one of the thirty-seven babies or of the 160 died, while among the 434 there were sixteen deaths. The figures are not large enough to warrant any final conclusions as to percentages, but doubtless they are fairly characteristic of the three classes. The immity of the babies in the two more fortunate classes during this hot forting the only happened to be complete, and that peculiarity would not be likely to be repeated.

That the one group did as well as the other is explained by the investigators as due to equally efficient care in both, in the one case, however, largely the care of highly trained stress.

Ayer's Hair Vigor; as now made from our new improved formula, is the latest, most scientific, and in every way the very best hair preparation ever placed upon the market. For falling hair and dandruff it is the one great medicine.

—Made by the J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

Many leading physicians and scientists in the United States have abandoned drugs as the cure for those patients who, living under high pressure, have overtaxed their mental and physical resources and become nervous wrecks. Many brilliant practitioners new treat such cases not with mediwrecks. Many brilliant practitioners now treat such cases, not with medicine or knife, but with thought, or the use of suggestion with the aid of hypnotism. They say to the exhausted, nervous society woman: "You do not need medicine. You must teach your brain and your nerves to rest.
